

The monument known as Monkland Canal, Netherhouse Road to Cuilhill Road comprises the remains of part of the Monkland Canal. This section, which is around 1.25km in length, is now mainly culverted and marshy in places. The monument includes the route of the canal, the visible embankments, and the visible and buried sections of the towpath. It also includes the remains of the canal basin and trans-shipment terminal known as the Cuilhill Gullet, including its associated standing masonry walls. This monument is one of five that together constitute the known remains of the Monkland Canal. The canal lies at about 70m OD. The scheduled area is linear in plan, to include the remains described above and an area around them within which evidence relating to the monument's construction, use and abandonment is expected to survive. On the S bank, the scheduling runs to the base of the embankment; on the N bank, the scheduling includes the top of the slope of the embankment. Where this feature has been buried, but where the opposite embankment is preserved, the line of the scheduled area has been defined using historic mapping. In the E section, the scheduled area widens up to 125m NNE-SSW (maximum) to include the remains of the Cuilhill Gullet. The scheduling specifically excludes: the M73 motorway bridge; all modern sluices, sluice crossings, drainage features and access hatches; and the above-ground elements of all electricity poles and conduits; water tanks; gas, wastewater and water pipe trenches; fences and gates; modern gardens and garden walls; and the upper 300mm of all access roads, paths and in-filled sections of the canal. The monument, which lies in the Parish of Old Monkland and the Counties of Lanark and Glasgow as shown in red on the Plan annexed and executed as relative hereto and which forms part of the subjects described in the aftermentioned deeds or registered in
