The Ancient Monuments and Archaeological Areas Act 1979

Addition to the schedule of monuments

Historic Environment Scotland, in exercise of the powers conferred on it by section 1(1) of the Ancient Monuments and Archaeological Areas Act 1979, hereby adds to the statutory schedule of monuments as set out below.

The monument known as Crombie anti-aircraft battery, 695m SE of Bullions comprises a First and Second World War anti-aircraft battery defending the strategic anchorage of the Firth of Forth and the naval base and related facilities around Rosyth. It is visible as a group of concrete and brick features, comprising two gun emplacements, two magazines and one range-finding or targeting position. It occupies a highly strategic location on a ridge on the north side of the Forth, with extensive views to the east and west along the river and across it to the south.

The scheduled area is irregular on plan to include the remains described above and an area around them within which evidence relating to the monument's construction and use is expected to survive.

The monument lies in the Parish of Torryburn and the County of Fife, as shown in red on the plan annexed and executed as relative hereto.
